Emptiness yourself to help others

When we give of ourselves without regard for self, we imitate Christ and how He gave of Himself for us.

Dr. William Greenaway is a professor of philosophical theology at Austin Presbyterian Seminary who makes the point that: “One does not self-empty by focusing on oneself. One is emptied to the degree one is by necessity the beloved of others, in need of help, and thus an object of their concern.”

As we look up to Jesus, we look to Him, while He looks at us. He emptied Himself for us.

The difference between imitate versus impersonate.

We look up to all kinds of people we look up to. We are aware that their goal is to live up to their person they look up to. The cross as its exclamation point, Os. The difference between imitate versus impersonate.

There is a small community. There is a small community. There is a small community. There is a small community.

Most groups chose to sit in the grass in circles, sharing visions of their future plans and weighing pros and cons of various career paths, querying the career counselors about pros and cons of various career paths.
